Dear [Name],

I will keep this short — the resume covers the history.

Twenty-three years in sales, and the part I have never gotten tired of is the beginning: the point where nobody knows yet who the buyer really is, or why the thing matters, or what to say in the first sentence. Working that out with a team, and then watching them go do it without me, is the most satisfying work I know.

What pulled me toward [Company] is [one honest sentence — the specific thing you noticed, not a compliment]. I would like to be part of it.

You will see on the resume that I am publicly sober and in recovery. I mention it here because it is not a footnote. It is where the directness comes from, and it is why the people I work with tell me the truth about their pipeline early enough for it to matter.

If it seems like there is something here, I would love to talk. Thank you for reading this.

Warmly,

Jess Ferretti
